The Gazette.

WEDNESDAY, 6th DECEMBER 1820.

Our regular series of Parliamentary proceedings were brought down to the 8th of June, when the arrival of the Thalia interrupted their regular publication, and as it is now impossible to g ve them at full length we purpose now to publish such portions of them only, as may give us a chance, of getting to the end of them by the time that another Ship arrives from old England.

We intentionally omitted, in our last number, to mention the accident which befel the Honorable the Governor, in being thrown from his Horse, near Surat, from an anxiety to announce, with confidence, that the injury suffered by him, in the fracture of the Collar Bone, was not likely to be attended by any inconvenience beyond a temporary confinement, and we have this day sincere gratification in stating this to be the fact.

We are sure we express the general sentiment when we say it is a wish to hear of his perfect recovery.

We have no official account, or any thing further from Arabia, concerning the failure of the attack on Laskerie; and lament the fate of so many* gallant officers and the sacrifice of so many men, and while it is satisfactory to their friends to know that they did every thing that they could do and only gave way to overpowering numbers it will be likewise a consolation to them, to know that they will not be unrevenged.

* Surgeon Whigham.
Lieuts. Lawrie
——————Walsh, } 2d of the 1st.
——————Perrin,
——————Price, Engineers.
——————Short, Marine Battalion.
400 Sepoys.

Having performed our duty in recording this sad accident, we now turn to more pleasing themes, and speak of the success of our arms in another quarter.

We allude to the gallant Capture of Dwarka by the force under Lieut. Colonel Stanhope.

It will be remembered that we have had friendly relations with Mooloo Manick the principal chief of this part of the country for many years, but that for these last two years, he in combination with the chiefs of Bate had broken through the treaties that had been made, and at last had gone into open rebellion. It was for the purpose of bringing them again to their duty that the army under Col. Stanhope invested this Fort, on the 25th of November and after negociation had been tried and found fruitless it was resolved to commence operations. For this purpose the field Artillery on the East side and the Nautilus Cruizer, Lieut. Middleton, on the West, were directed to open their fire, under the hope of hastening Mooloo Manick's decision rather than any expectation of making much impression on the walls, which are of the best Masonry well defended with towers.

It had however the desired effect, for it brought out the chief of Wassaye, the head Bramin of the Pagoda and lastly Mooloo Manick himself, who however would accede to nothing short of a provision for himself and being permitted to remain in Oka mandel.

Having thus failed in the way of negociation it was resolved to take the place by escalade and to cut off the retreat of the Garrison.

This being the object in view, the Picquets were strengthned & advanced, during the night, and the morning Gun served, as a signal for the Storming parties to advance, each consisting of 70 of the 65th and 150 Sepoys of the 2 | 3 and 1 | 5 Regiment N. I. each party having 50 men in reserve.

The March to the point of attack, was as orderly and soldier like as could be wished and they were not in the least discomposed by the fire that was kept up from the walls, on their advance, and during the time it took to raise the Ladders; this effected, nothing could exceed the ardour of our brave fellows who soon cleared the Ramparts, in spite of the desperate resistance of the Arabs and Scindians, who after discharging their Matchlocks fought Sword in hand, but who were ultimately driven along the Ramparts, through the Town into the Pagoda. Here the most desperate resistance was expected as the Pagoda was surrounded by a high and strong wall, but this was surmounted by the Gallantry of Major Digby 65th, Major Stannus, and Lieut. Faden of the 65th who having gained the summit of a lofty house, made a descent into the Area of the Pagoda, followed by part of their brave associates.

The Garrison endeavoured to make their escape to the adjoining Jungles, but were met by the several picquets and a dreadful carnage ensued; a large body of them were met by one of the Troops of 1st N. C. under Captain Soillieux, who charged them, they retreated through a back water where the Cavalry had some difficulty in getting at them; it was here that the Gallant Captain Soillieux, received two wounds one of which deprived the service of the right hand of a brave officer.

The Enemy again threw themselves into the water were it became deeper and widened into a kind of lake and defended themselves about an hour against two bodies of Infantry, under Lieuts. Levery and Parry.

At length after numbers were killed, the parties were ordered to desist, and persuasions were tried to induce them to submit, but they continued to fire and would not hear of surrender until some Six pounders were fired amongst them; the few that remained, were mostly wounded, they consisted of about 50, and about 50 more were found in the Pagoda, the whole that have escaped alive out of 550 of whom the Garrison consisted.

The peaceable Inhabitants had removed some days before into Kattywar, and the Brahmins had retired to a Pagoda outside the town, so that retribution has only fallen on that Class, that never give, and consequently never expected to receive quarter.

Nothing could exceed the gallantry and discipline of our troops; Lieutenant Colonel Stanhope, has expressed his admiration, and has added his thanks very fully in General Orders.

Our loss in this dashing affair is as follows 4 Rank and file killed, 1 Captain 2 Lieutenants, and 25 Rank and file wounded; Total 4 killed 28 wounded.

OFFICERS WOUNDED.

Captain Soillieux, 1st Light Cavalry severely.

Lieutenant Marriott, Personal Brigade Major, ditto.

Lieutenant Cassan, H. M. 65th, ditto.

The improvements going on in the town and suburbs of Bomb y under the sanction and control of the bench of Magistrates, are deserving of notice, and commendation; The Roads that are finished are excelled by none; the principal street in the immense Northern suburb, is near two miles in length, with a foot path on each side of from 10 to 12 feet in breadth, and an extensive drain is now in hand which will add much to its salubrity.

There is still however some abuses that we could wish to see corrected, & which if brought to the notice of the proper authorities, we have no hesitation in saying would meet a speedy redress. The most prominent of these is the manner in which Carriages are driven through the streets and particularly through the Gates.

Though their is some allowance to be made for the demi military, demi commercial character of the Fortress of Bombay, yet we have observed that some regulation might be made with a good effect, and without interference with any prejudice or custom of the native population.

In all Fortresses or Garrison towns on the continent of Europe, no one but the Sovereign, or his representative the Governor, has the privilege of driving through the Gates at full speed; or any person except on Military duty, is permitted to enter with his Spurs on.

This is well understood, for not many months ago, a Eu opean Centinel at the Church Gate, admonished a Gentleman in a Buggy who was driving through at full speed, of its danger and impropriety and insisted that he should walk his Horse, quietly through.

The Umbrella in the Eastern world, like the Spur in the Western is an emblem of Sovereignty and no person carrying an Umbrella is suffered to pass through the Gate of a Fortress in India or China with it extended, except the Sovereign on his representative.

The few regulations that suggest themselves to us at present are.

First,—That furious driving, should be discouraged by the M gistrates, and a Police regulation to this effect should be enacted.

Secondly,—That all Carriages should be driven gently through the Gates.

Thirdly,—That all hired Buggys and other Vehicles, Hackeries &c. should set down outside the several Gates.

Fourthly,—That all Gora Walahs who now drive their Masters Buggies or Hackries in and out of the Gates should be made to lead them through the Gates.

A Correspondent at Bhooj, informs us that several slight shocks of an Earthquake have been felt at that place and rather a severe one on the 13th ultimo.

The Lady Borringdon with the Scindean Vakeels proceeded in their voyage to Crotchey on Monday last.

Captain Sadlier, will follow we hear to day in the H. C. armed Ketch Vigilant.

Our prices current remain without any material alteration, and in fact if we except the demand for Europe articles, we may say that the market is glutted with both the produce of Bengal and all other parts; Soft Sugar of good quality, may be quoted a shade higher, but as our China Ships may be daily expected, it can hardly be supposed that those prices will remain.

At Buxar, on Friday, the 3d November, Mr. W. P. Wattell, aged 58 years; sincerly regretted.

At Muttra, on the 18th October, Lieut. James Williamson, of the 1st Batt. 4th Regt. N. I.

On the 27th October, near Puttumoondee, on his return to Cuttack, from Calcutta, on board the Boat; after a short illness of the fever, Mr. J. H. Baptist, of Pt. de Gale in Ceylon, aged 67 years, 4 months and 28 days, much regretted by his relations and friends.

We have waited until the tear of friendship should have dried, before we could venture to insert in our Obituary, a name, which could not be suffered to pass by without some tribute to the excellence of him who bore it, and which at the same time it was painful even to advert to while the first impressions of his loss were operating with all their force on the mind and heart.

George Ewan Law, Esq. of the Honorable Company's Civil Service of this Establishment, who died at the Presidency on the 6th instant, was the third child of Ewan Law, one of the Commissioners of Naval Inquiry, whose patriotic labours led to the impeachment of the late Lord Melville. Law, late Bishop of Carlisle was his paternal grandfather, and Markham late Archbishop of York his maternal grandfather. One of his uncles on the father's side was the late Lord Ellenborough; a second, the Bishop of Elphin in Ireland; and a third, a distinguished Civilian on this Establisment, now residing in America. By his mother's side, his uncles were, Markham, Dean of York, Admiral Markham, &c. &c. &c.

But neither the list of ancestry, nor the relationship to distinguished living characters, are necessary to skew the estimation in which the distinguished subject of this brief notice was held; his talents for the public service, unaided by any other consideration, were sufficient to obtain him the most marked distinctions, and to promise an honorable and useful career; and his private and domestic virtues made him the ornament of social life, and the chief source of consolation and happiness to the respected family, with which he became allied by an early marriage.

The illness, which at length carried him to the grave before he had attained his 25th year, was long, painful, and progressively debilitating, so that his death seemed almost certain, for a considerable period before the awful hour arrived. The fond and anxious hopes of those who hung around his [illegible] of sickness were nevertheless occasionally [illegible] and strengthned, by gleams of light that n[illegible] them relieved their despondency; but th[illegible] rather the bright triumphs of mental forti[illegible] physical suffering, and the energies of the [illegible] displayed themselves in cheerful and even happy resignation to the long and painful affliction under which he laboured, enabling him calmly to contemplate a dissolution which had no terrors for one whose hopes of future happiness were founded on an adamantine base.

Those who were favored with his friendship, and enjoyed his familiar intercourse, need not to be reminded how prominently the high and lofty principles of a patriot Englishman shone forth in all his words and actions; and how the refined honour of an English gentleman dictated all that he ever said or did. But his bereaved and disconsolate family, to whom he was bound by still stronger ties, who shall speak their sorrow? or what language can pourtray their grief?

No arrivals from sea have been reported since our last; but the following departures from Calcutta have taken place; viz.

Ship Lady Nugent, J. Hunter, for Bombay.

——Gram Para, B. C. M. Sabro, ——Canoa, B. C. Martins, } (Port.) for Rio de Janeiro.

——Dunvegan Castle, D. Campbell, for Bombay.

——Lord Hungerford, M. O'Brien, to complete for England.

Vessels on the eve of sailing—

Ship Waterloo, Lovell for Colombo.

——Rockingham, Waugh, for London via the Cape.

——Ganges, Chivers, for London via the Cape and St. Helena.

On Friday last, Mons. Sagrais, to whom we referred in our paper of that day as having made his escape from the Calcutta Jail, was brought back by Mr. Smoult, the Deputy Sheriff, from Serampore, where he had expected to find refuge and protection under the Danish flag. We understand that Mr. Kreeting, the Governor of that Settlement, directed him to be given up without hesitation, as he did not wish that asylum, afforded under his government to persons laboring merely under pecuniary embarrassments, to be considered as open for the benefit of those, who might break out of Jail or commit any direct violation of laws established for the well-being of society.

DEPARTURE OF MR. METCALFE.

Yesterday, Mr. Metcalfe, appointed to succeed Mr. Russel as Resident at the Court of His Highness the Nizam, at Hyderabad embarked on the Pilot Vessel Hattrass, accompanied by Lieut. Barnes, who is to hold the situation of Second Assistant to the Resident, Mr. Wells appointed Third Assistant, and Capt. T. Mackenzie, who is we believe appointed to the Nizam's Cavalry. The Hattrass proceeds direct to Masulipatam, where Mr. Metcalfe and suite will disembark and afterwards travel by dawk to their destination. From the distinguished talents of Mr. M. as a public servant, and the high degree of estimation in which he has been long and deservedly held as a member of the Indian Community, it was to be expected that some strong public demonstration of esteem would have attended his departure from the presidency. That this has not been the case is not to be attributed to the indifference of his friends, who were extremely anxious to have a public opportunity of expressing their sentiments and of taking leave in the Town Hall, but to the wishes of Mr. M. himself, who, we understand, declined compliance with all solicitations that were made for his sanction to such proceedings. The feelings however, of private friendship were not to be restrained, and a select party of gentlemen high in the civil service of Government, entertained Mr. M. with a few of his particular military friends at the Town Hall on Wednesday, when sentiments and feelings, that had been long cherished with pleasure and strengthened by time as well as the consciousness of mutual worth, found abundant expression, and marked the warmth and extent of attachment, which the private as well as public life of Mr. M. had secured in the settlement. It would be indelicate in us to detail the particulars of a meeting so professedly private, but we should be negligent in recording the passing events of the day, were we altogether to omit noticing its occurrence.—Hurk.

The Asia Grande, on her passage to this country, fell in with a raft made of spars, on the [illegible] of August, which was about forty feet in length and twenty in breadth, having no one on it. On the 12th September, in Lat. 39°, 37,, Long. 36°, 44,, 45 E. off St. Paul's, she passed a ship bottom upwards, and apparently about 700 tons. In the terms of this statement there must be some mistake, as the given position is certainly far off from any Island named St. Paul's. On the 26th of October, she parted with the Lady Raffles, in Lat. 11,, 7 N Long. 91,, 20. 50 E. Coming up the Bay.

Extract from the Report from the Ship Hero of Malown, from Batavia 20th August, Mintow, 17th September, Sincapore 23d September, Malacca 1st Octobee, and Penang 17th October.

"Two ships were standing into Mintow Roads on the 17th of September, which I took to be the English ship Jane, Captain Maughan, and [illegible] ship Mercury, Captain Gordon, with reinforcements from Batavia. The Flotilla were all lying at Mintow, but no appearance of another attack on Palembang this season."

The brig Pallas, of Calcutta, had sailed from Mintow, with stores and troops for the East Coast of Banca.

On the night of the 29th of October, between Norcandam, and Barren Island, passed between two large Ship; one of them carrying a Light, which we supposed to be the Honorable Company's Ships Marquis of Huntly, and Dunira, from Calcutta for China.

The Ship Britania, Captain Snowball was loading at Penang and would sail for China about the end of October.

Extract of a Letter, from Lieutenant Crawford, the Commander of the Honorable Company's Cruizer Investigator.

"Any improvement in the navigation of the China Sea, being of the greatest importance to Indiamen, or those Ships traversing from the Straits of Malacca to Canton, and the Philippine Islands; I deem it my duty to report to you, that on my return from Manilla in August last, I discovered some Coral Reefs situated from Lat. 9° 40' to Lat. 9° 42' N. and Longitude 113° 4' E to 113° 8½' East of Greenwich, making in 3 patches, this with the West London Shoal in Lat. 8° 54' N. and Long. 112° 00' East and other dangers in Lat. 113 27' N. and Long. 114° 19' E. form the Western boundary of a cluster of Shoals, Islets and Sand Banks unexplored; therefore it it advisable, that, navigators shoulds be careful not to pass to the Eastward of this line, until the Vessels reach Lat. 11° 40' N."

Just as our Paper was going to Press, the arrival of the Brig Norfolk, Captain Maingy, was reported; and we perform a most painful duty in announcing to the Public, the Death of William Sartorius, Esq. Accountant and Civil Auditor of this Presidency. Mr. Sartorius proceeded in the Norfolk on the Public Service, to the King of Acheen, and we understand that the disease, which has thus proved fatal, attacked him on the 22d Instant and terminated his earthly carreer at 3 o'Clock yesterday afternoon while coming into the harbour.

The loss of this amiable and worthy Gentleman will be deeply felt and regretted by the Society of this Settlement, of which he was an esteemed Member and one of its brightest ornaments; and deplored by the Public, generally.

His remains will be removed for interment from the residency of A J. Kerr, Esq. in Farquhar Street, at a quarter before 6 o'Clock this Evening.

JUNE 25.

MISCELLANEOUS: CHIEFLY DOMESTIC.

Sir Thomas Lawrence is, it seems, about to exhibit the illustrious personage whose pictures he painted while on the Continent for the gallery of our Monarch. The portrait of the present Pope is amongst the number.—His Majesty's gracious present of a superb gold medal and rich chain, to be worn by the President of the Royal Academy, will, it is said, be followed by an order for the members to wear, upon all public occasions, robes or gowns, according to their several ranks in the Institution, nearly similar to those which distinguish the the different degrees at the two Universities.—Some alterations are about to take place in the regimentals and equipments of the two regiments of Life Guards; the splendid Roman helmets are to be discarded, as too heavy and the men are to wear fur caps, elegantly decorated with a handsome plume of feathers—The two regiments of life guards have been, for some time past, training, in their respective ridinghouses, in a new exercise, for parrying pikes with their broad swords, and to render them more effective in irregular attacks of an enemy.—Ali Pacha's declaration of independence is no longer to be doubted. Letters from the most authentic sources state this important intelligence, and add further, that the Turkish army does not seem to act with much decision or vigour against him.—Letters dated 25th March have been received from Lieutenant Lyon, announcing his safe return to Tripoli, with his attendant Belford. This is preparatory to their resuming the procecution of the mission into the interior of Africa; to the conducting of which Mr. Lyon has been appointed, in consequence of the lamented death of Mr. Ritchie.

SWINDLERS.

Within the last two or three days a young man, of fashionable exterior, arrived at Plymouth on horseback, and took lodgings in George-street. He immediately, under different assumed names, but most commonly by that of Fox, to which was attached, colonel, major, or lieutenant, as best suited his purpose, visited several tradesmen in Plymouth and Dock, of whom he obtained a military cocked hat and feather, sword, sash, spurs, &c. in which he paraded through the streets on his prancing horse, en militaire. He introduced himself on board the Impregnable a day or two since, as Lord St. Lawrence, and was politely shewn through the ship by one of the officers. His conduct having excited some suspicion, a tradesman, who had furnished him with a pair of boots, went to his lodgings, accompanied by a constable, and demanded payment, when he drew his sword and a pistol, and threatened to kill whoever might approach. In consequence of the assault a warrant was obtained, and he was apprehended in a stable in which he had locked himself. On being searched, a variety of love-letters, pawn brokers' tickets, cards of address with different names, tavern bills, &c. were found upon him.

ST. DOMINGO.

COLUMBIAN,—JUNE 21.

Extract of a letter dated Port au Prince 10th April 1820.

It is now the rainy season, but the coffee is coming in, and of excellent quality. Mountain coffee, of the best kind, sells at thirty one sous, that is 18 cents. There are now lying in this harbour 80 or 100 vessels, some of them from France.

It is computed that there in Port au Prince twenty thousand blacks, seven thousand mulatoes, and two thousand white people, the latter consisting of all nations, but chiefly of European French.

The British admiral Sir Home Popham is expected here every day, and great preparations are making to receive him. In despite of the prejudices of the people of Jamaica, he entertained the Haytian deputies there as a British admiral, in company with Lady Popham. And a writer by the name of Stewart, a member of the Jamaica legislature, attack the admiral on this account in a piece of much virulence, which was subsequently republished in the New York papers. Stewart is himself a creole of the island of Jamaica.

President Boyer is a small man, but brave energetic, and gallant without being uxorious. In the most troublesome period of the civil wars he has often giving proofs of the greatest military talents and under the walls of Port au Prince, checked the whole army of Christophe with a handful of men composed of the best families of the republic, until the arrival of the forces of Petion from the south co-operating with this Spartan band saved the the infant republic from the fangs of a merciless tyrant.

Every person who can prove himself to be of African descent is allowed to resume the possession of the lands in this island, of which the revolution may have deprived him, and the government has manifested every disposition to facilitate them in the acquisition of their property and the honours of the republic. Nay, but this is secret, some whose colou was while, being four degrees removed from mere African ancestry, have returned to this island to enjoy the property they might have had a right to in virtue of either of their ancestors. Yet the people of this country are not under their own prejudice, but prefer themselves on account of their complexion, and have already the idea that the highest order of a quadroon beauty of saffron hue, is more beautiful than the finest intermixtures of red and white. But the generallity of the republic vary in their appearance, from the deep black of general Jedaon, (for you must know that they have been painted at full length, and are to be seen in a room of the national palace) to the perfectly European and military appearance of general Lys.

The national Palace has been lately decorated with the richest furniture from France and England, in the selection of which, great taste has been exhibited.

PARLIAMENTARY DEPUTATION to the QUEEN.

From an early hour yesterday morning a great crowd had assembled round the residence of her Majesty, in Portman-street, in expectation of seeing the Deputation appointed by the House of Commons arrive to present the Address of that House to her Majesty. The crowd were perfectly peaceable, and manifested nothing but good humour till about eleven o'clock, when a man, who, from his countenance, appeared to be a foreigner, passed the house and deliberately flung a short stick at the parlour windows. He was immediately laid hold of, but refused to give any account of his motives for committing the outrage: the crowd appeared very well disposed to inflict summary punishment on him; but some respectable persons interfered, and suggested that from the composure of his demeanour he could not be intoxicated, but that he was probably deranged. This humane opinion was adopted, and the man was allowed to be taken to the Public-office, Marlborough-street, to be dealt with according to law. At one o'clock, the crowd had considerably increased, and noblemen on horseback, ladies in open carriages, and persons of all descriptions on foot, were confusedly mingled together. About ten minutes past one o'clock the Deputation arrived. Mr. Wilberforce and Mr. Stuart Wortley were in the first chariot. Immediately after they made their appearance a tremendous hooting, hissing, and groaning commenced, which was continued as the carriages of Sir Thos. Dyke Acland and Mr. Bankes drove up to the door.

The members alighted without any interruption, and immediately went into the house—they were dressed in full court dresses, and appeared quite unaffected by the uncourteous greetings of the assemblage, who continued hooting and groaning long after they had gone into the house; intermingling cries of "Turn them out!"—"No Wilberforce!"—No Address!"

On the deputation again making their appearance, they were assailed by the renewed displeasure of the populace, who applied to them various offensive epithets, and strongly animadverted on the object of their mission. They gained their carriages as soon as possible, and were quickly driven from the presence of their boisterous censors. The crowd continued to encrease in front of her Majestys residence during the afternoon, and by repeated shouts, evinced an enthusiastic feeling in her favour. A general idea prevailed that she had rejected the overtures for any compromise inconsistent with her dignity as queen, and this seemed to add fervour to the affectionate cheers of the people. The same animated scene continued till long after dusk. Her Majesty is in the highest spirits.

When Mr. Brougham and Mr. Denman came from her Majesty's presence, they were greeted with loud acclamations, and many individuals pressed forward to shake these honest advocates by the hand.

Her Majesty received the deputation in the drawing-room. Mr. Brougham was on her right hand and Mr. Denman on her left. These gentlemen were attired in their full dress robes and wigs as on court days.

Mr. Wilberforce and his friends having approached, paid the customary obeisance to royalty. Mr. Wilberforce then stated the object of their attendance in her Majesty's presence, and read the resolution reported in the proceedings of the House of Commons in a subsequent page. At the conclusion her Majesty handed her answer to Mr. Brougham, who by her command, immediately read it to the deputation. A copy of the Answer was then given to Mr. Wilberforce, and the deputation retired.

LONDON FEMALE FASHIONS FOR JULY.

Walking Dress.—A cambric muslin round dress; the skirt moderately full, and rather long: it is finishad at the bottom by a deep florence, disposed in large plaits, and headed by a number of tucks, which reach nearly to the knee. The body is high; it is light to the shape, and is ornamented round the bust with a profusion of tucks, which are made as small as possible, and disposed in such a manner as to have something of the appearance of a pelerine. Long sleeve, rather tight to the arm, surmounted by a very small epaulette, which is rather shallow in front of the arm, and deep behind; it is finished by four small tucks. The bottom of the sleeve, which falls very far over the hand, is also tucked to correspond. The spencer worn with this dress is composed of dove-coloured soie de Londres, and trimmed with rose coloured zephyrine: the waist is the usual length; it is tight to the shape, and is finished behind by a short full jacket, divided into three scollops, which are edged and lined with rose-coloured zephyrine. Long sleeve, of moderate width; epaulette plain on the shouldey, and ornamented at the bottom with dove-coloured satin Spanish puffs. The spencer has no collar, but it is finished at the throat by a large cape, lined and edged with zephyrine; it is rounded, and reaches nearly to the shoulders. Head-dress, a bonnet composed of rose-coloured metalic gauze: the brim is large, and of a singular but becoming shape: it is finished at the edge by a double band of bias pink crape; it is rounded at the corners, and is ornamented in the middle by a deep point looped back; in the division made by the insertion of the point is placed a small bouquet, composed of grass and rose-buds. The crown is low; is something in the shape of a melon, and is adorned at the back part with a number of satin rouleaus, placed bias on each side; a large bouquet, composed of wall-flowers, roses, and different kinds of grass, is placed in front of the crown; and rose-coloured strings tie the bonnet under the chin. Dove-coloured kid-shoes, and Limeric gloves.

Court Dress.— A blue satin petticoat, finished at the bottom by a silver foil trimming, above which is a mingled wreath of white and pale blush roses; this is surmounted by a rich trimming of silver lama. Over the blue satin petticoat is one of point lace, short enough to display the entire of the rich trimmingof the satin petticoat; the border of the lace one is extremely beautiful: the pattern of the middle is a rose, thistle, and shamroc entwined. The corsage is white satin, and the front, which is formed in the stomacher style, is nearly covered with pearls; the corsage is cut very low round the bust, and the front part is edged with pearls; we believe there are three rows. The robe is blue zephyrine, the body rather long in the waist; the back part made in the corset style, and with a small peak: the robe is trimmed round with point lace, set on very full; a double fall of point lace ornaments the top of the back; it forms a full ruff between the shoulders. The sleeve is white satin, covered with blond lace, and tastefully intermixed with pearls; it is very full on the shoulder, but the fulness is confined at the bottom by a plain broad band of pearls. The front hair is disposed in a few light ringlets on the forehead; the hind hair is concealed by a profusion of ostrich feathers, which are placed behind, and droop over the forehead, which is encircled by a broad pearl bandeau. Point lace lappets, white kid gloves, and white satin shoes, ornamented with rosettes of pearl. Necklace and ear rings, pearl. White crape fan, richly embroidered in silver.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON FASHION AND DRESS.

Promenade dress has altered but little since last month, and it is not so light as might be expected at this time of the year. White dresses are fashionable; but we see an equal, or rather a greater, number of silk ones; and the latter are in general of the richest and most substantial description. Pelisses are still fashionable, but not upon the whole so general as spencers. The pelisses worn in walking dress are always composed of rich silk; they are lined in general with white sarsnet. There is nothing novel in trimmings. Wasts are the same length as last month. Spencers are now generally made with short smart jackets; some of these are scolloped, others pointed, and several consist of two or three rows of square tabs. Some are made without collars, others have deep falling collars, and a good many elegantes still retain those large high collars which stand out very much from the throat, and are very high behind. Spencers are mostly trimmed with satin, or a mixture of satin and the same material as the spencer. The new silk called zephyrine is also a good deal used in trimmings; its light and soft texture renders it very well adapted for that purpose. Silk bonnets are upon the whole most fashionable in the promenade dress, though Leghorn ones are still considered very genteel. We observe that white satin and white gros de Naples spencers begin to be a good deal worn in carriage dress: some of there are made in a style at once tasteful and appropriate to the season; they are trimmed with a light embroidery of myrtle leaves in green silk, which goes up the fronts, round the collar, and round the waist: the cuffs are also ornamented to correspond; the gauze is disposed in very full puffs, which are drawn in a bias direction through the satin. The bonnets worn with these spencers are in general very light and appropriate: the one which we are about to describe is, we think, the most elegant summer bonnet which we have lately seen: it is composed of white net; the brim very large; the crown of a moderate size, and of an oval form; a rich embroidery of green satin leaves, which forms a broad wreath, goes round the edge of the brim, and two wreaths of a similar description are embroidered in a slanting direction across the crown. A large bunch of different kinds of grass is placed rather far back at the left side, in such a manner as to fall over a little to the right; and a rich white sarsnet ribbon with green edges ties the bonnet under the chin. We observe that tabbinet and sarsnet high gowns are a good deal worn in morning dress, though not so much as muslin: the former are in general trimmed with gauze only, or else with gauze and a mixture of the same material as the dress; the latter are trimmed with soft muslin bouillonne, or else with tucks or flounces. The bodies are variously made; some are ornamanted with work, others with tucks, and a good many are adorned with small buttons, which are disposed in a double row on each side of the front, in the stomacher style. The epaulette. which is very full, is interspersed with buttons, as is also the cuff, which is made full, to correspond with the epaulette.

Dinner dress continues nearly the same as last month: muslin is still but partially worn; but rich silks, both plain and figured, are very general. We observe also that poplin appears to be in request; gauze and lace are likewise fashionable, but not so much so for dinner parties as for very full dress.

The materials used in grand costume continue to be of the richest and most varied description: nothing could be more magnificent than the dresses of the ladies who attended the drawing-room which his Majesty held to celebrate his birthday on Thursday, the 15th of June, Gold and silver tissue, coloured and white satin, both figured and plain, white and coloured gros de Naple silk, levantine, velours epingle, white and coloured net, blond net, gauze, tulle, blond, and thread lace, were the materials of the dresses. The trimmings were silver fringe, gold & silver lamas, point lace, blond lace, pearls, rouleaus of various materials, Brussels lace, embroidery coloured silks, artificial flowers intermixed with satin and net & Roman pearls intermixed with blond & satin. We observed that the petticoats were all trimmed very high, & in an uncommonly rich style: draperies were not so much worn as usual; flounces were very general. Several of the bodies were made a la Sevigne, that is to say, a piece set-in in folds on each side of the bust which forms the shape in a very becoming style; the lower part of the body plain. The sleeves were very full. The head-dresses were feathers and diamonds, or feathers and pearls: in some instances coloured stones were mixed with the diamonds; in others diamonds and pearls were mixed: this, however, was rarely the case. There were also, in a few instances, an intermixture of artificial flowers and jewels with feathers. There were very few toques. The lappets were of Brussels or blond lace. The colours were almost as various as the materials: white, green, lilac, lavender, citron, blue, primrose, pink, ponceau, geranium, and peach-colour. White was the most general: we observed in many instances both the body and train were white. As court dress does not vary, except in the trimmings, we do not enter into any detailed account of the make of the dresses.

The Observer, July 2.

SHERIFFS' COURT, Red Lion-Square.

[Before Mr. Under Sheriff Birchall, and a Special Jury.]

Capt. Pellew, R. N. v. Tenant, Esq.—Mr. Bailey opened the pleadings in this case. The declaration charged, that the defendant had seduced the wife of the plaintiff. The defendant had suffered judgement to go by default, and the jury were now impanneled to assess the amount of damages to which the plaintiff was entitled.

Mr. Gazelee stated the circumstance, under which this action had been brought. He observed that although this was not one of the most aggravated cases which could come before a jury, yet when they considered the respective situations of the parties in a professional point of view, he had no doubt that they would agree with him in thinking that it was no light case on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff, Capt. Pellew, was the eldest son of a nobleman, Lord Exmouth, who but to name, was sufficient to entitle him to every consideration in the minds of Englishmen. It was impossible to mention the name of Lord Exmouth without recurring to both his public and private character, which were alike distinguished by every quality calculated to excite the esteem and veneration of his fellow-men; and it was not the least obnoxious part of the defendant's conduct, that, by his guilty connection with the plaintiff's wife, a spurious issue might enjoy all those honours which had been justly be stowed upon this brave and meritorious officer. Capt. Pellew, like his father, had been engaged in the naval service from his youth; and at the time when the defendant forgot the honour of himself and of the profession to which he belonged (for he was a soldier), he was pursuing the path of duty. He had also to state, that Mrs. Pellew was well descended. She was the daughter of a person well known in the annals of this country. She was the daughter of Sir G. Barlow, who was many years governor of Madras, where he had conducted himself in the most exemplary manner. It happened in the year 1808, while Sir G. Barlow was executing his functions as governor of Madras, that Lord Exmouth, then Sir. Edward Pellew, was admiral on that station, and had his flag on board the Culloden, of which ship the plaintiff was the captain. An intimacy took place between the governor and the admiral, and repeated intercourse naturally followed. At that time Miss Barlow was eighteen, and the plaintiff about one or two and twenty years of age. A mutual attachment sprung up between then, and after a short, but ardent courtship, they were married as St. Mary's Church, Madras, on the 1st of October, 1808. They remained at Madras during the command of Lord Exmouth, and then returned to England, where they lived together for some years with the greatest harmony and satisfaction. They had five children of whom three were now living. Some where about the year 1817, and he felt it his duty to state this circumstance on behalf of the defendent, from some cause which it was difficult to define, but which he believed orignated in the temper of Mrs. Pellew, a separation took place between her and her husband. They lived apart; but still there was a reasonable hope that they might yet, by the intercession of mutual friends have been reunited in still stronger bonds of affection. Whatever hope of this sort had existed, the conduct, of the defendant had completely frustrated,; and that separation which might reasonably have been supposed but temporary, was now rendered eternal. He had before stated that the defendent was a soldier he was an officer in the 35th regiment of foot; and when this was considered, he thought his violation of the principles of morality was still more criminal. He ought rather to have been the first to have vindicated the honour of a brother officer, than to have been himself the means of betraying it. It was an additional source of painful reflection, too, that of the three children whom he had mentioned, one was a daughter, who was now by her mother's conduct, not alone deprived of the protection of a parent, but became exposed to all the malignancy of a censorious world. The defendant having suffered judgment to go by default, it was not necessary for him to enter into those details which were commonly introduced in such cases, and which were alike disgusting to the jury and the advocate. He should content himself by calling witnesses to prove the marriage—the subsequent state of happiness in which the parties lived—and the fact of Mrs. Pellew having been, after her separation from her husband, found living with the defendant in the barracks at Whiddy Island, near Cork, where she was delivered of a child in February last. These facts he should leave to the jury, and it would be for them to give such damages as they conceived the injury which the plaintiff had sustained fairly demanded.

William Henry Mason, a clerk in the India House, produced a book containing the copies of the registries of marriage at Madras. These registries were regularly transmitted to the India House. From this it appeared, that the plantiff was married to his present wife in the parish of St. Mary's, Fort St. George, Madras, on the 1st of Oct. 1818.

Mr. Richard Cotton: I am a purser in the Navy. I know Mr. and Mrs. Pellew. I was in England when they returned from India, in 1809. I went to them at Plymouth, where I was introduced to Mrs. Pellew. I visited them repeatedly for a fortnight at Lord Exmouth's house, where they resided. I had opportunities of seeing them together repeatedly. I continued my acquaintance till 1816, when they went abroad. I thought they lived together most happily. Captain Pellew was a most indulgent husband. They have three children. The youngest is about four years of age—a daughter. In consequence of some unfortunate reports, I went to Ireland in December last; I saw Mrs. Pellew there. She was in the officers' apartments at Whiddy Island, near Bantry Bay; she was in Mr. Tenant's appartments. Mr. T. is a lieutenant of the 35th regiment. He is about thirty years of age; Mrs. Pellew is about twenty-eight; Capt. Pellew is about thirty-two or thirty-three. I remained in Ireland till last May. Mrs. Pellew when I saw her was far advanced in pregnancy. I procured a nurse for her, whom she afterwards declined having. She was brought to bed about the beginning of Feb. I do not think Capt. Pellew had been in Ireland. If he had I believe I should have known. Capt. Pellew was Captain of the Impregnable at Plymouth, and he remained there for the last two years, except when he attended his parliamentary duties.—Cross examined by Mr. Selwyn: I first heard of differences between Captain Pellew and his lady last March two years. I heard from Capt. Pellew of their separation
